INTRODUCTION

Identification

The Ghislaine Toutain fonds reflects the activities and functions carried out by Ghislaine Toutain in the course of her career: as a political activist within CERES and the Parti socialiste, as a journalist, as an elected representative, as an employee of the Fondation Jean-Jaurès, and as a political adviser and parliamentary aide to Pierre Mauroy. The fonds consists of personal papers.
It also contains the activist papers of her husband, Francis Sorin.

Dates

The Ghislaine Toutain fonds contains records dating from 1966, the year CERES was founded, to 2018, when Ghislaine Toutain ceased working for the Fondation Jean-Jaurès.

Extent

The fonds consists of 16 archival boxes containing paper records, measuring approximately 8 linear metres.

Biographical note on Ghislaine Toutain

Ghislaine Toutain was born on 24 April 1946 in Aulnay-sous-Bois (93), the daughter of a French teacher and a woman employed by a company working in the field of vaccination. Her parents were committed Communists, and she grew up in a highly politicised environment. Having been made aware of issues relating to women's employment from an early age, she was encouraged by her parents to pursue further education and enter the workforce.
In 1967, she obtained a law degree from the Université Panthéon-Assas and began studying at the Institut d'études politiques de Paris (Sciences Po). There she met Jean-Pierre Chevènement, a lecturer who was looking for a secretary to type the first texts of the Centre d'études, de recherches et d'éducation socialiste (CERES), founded the previous year. Because she had a telephone at home and said that she knew how to use a typewriter, Jean-Pierre Chevènement offered her this voluntary assignment, which Ghislaine Toutain accepted. This event would shape the rest of her career and mark the beginning of her political activism.

In 1969, Ghislaine Toutain graduated from Sciences Po. That same year, she joined the Parti socialiste. She belonged to the CERES tendency and was a member of the Ninth Section of the Parti socialiste (Fédération de Paris). She attended the 1971 Épinay Congress and was hired by the Parti socialiste that same year as editor-in-chief of the monthly Combat socialiste, a new newspaper which she helped to establish and which was launched with the aim of strengthening the party's presence in the workplace. Alongside her work as a journalist, she continued her studies and, in 1972, obtained a DES in political science from the Université de Paris. As part of this degree, she wrote a dissertation on CERES entitled Le CERES: une tentative de rénovation idéologique et pratique du Parti socialiste. Her book Le CERES, un combat pour le socialisme, co-written with Michel Charzat and with a preface by Jean-Pierre Chevènement, was published by Calmann-Lévy in 1975. In 1976, she married Francis Sorin, whom she had met while studying at Sciences Po and who was also involved in the Parti socialiste for several years, notably within the Commission nationale Communication-Propagande. They had two children, born in 1976 and 1978 respectively.

Ghislaine Toutain worked for Combat socialiste alongside Georges Sarre for ten years, until June 1981, when the newspaper ceased publication. It had become a daily at the beginning of 1981 as part of the campaign for the presidential elections.

A new stage in her career began at that point. A candidate in the June 1981 legislative elections, she was elected in Paris's 10th constituency. She herself explained her candidacy by referring to the "fact that the Parti socialiste, under pressure from feminists, particularly Yvette Roudy, was beginning to ensure a degree of representation for women in the political sphere."

Between 1983 and 1986, she served as a councillor for the 11th arrondissement of Paris. In 1986, Ghislaine Toutain stood again in the legislative elections, this time in the Marne, in the Châlons-sur-Marne constituency. She was selected as a candidate from outside the constituency because her re-election in Paris appeared unlikely. This decision caused tensions with local members of the Parti socialiste, but enabled her to serve a second term.

In 1988, following François Mitterrand's re-election and the dissolution of Parliament, she stood again in the Marne's 4th constituency. She was defeated and withdrew following the first-round results.

Her arrival in the Assemblée nationale in 1981 marked the beginning of her work on feminist issues and women's rights, which would remain a central concern throughout the rest of her career. A member of the Commission des Affaires culturelles, familiales et sociales of the Assemblée nationale, Ghislaine Toutain was also rapporteur responsible for issuing an opinion on the budget of the Ministry of Women's Rights between 1981 and 1986.

She was also vice-president of the parliamentary delegation on demographic issues and chaired a study group tasked with analysing the implications of changes in French society for civil, tax and social legislation. From 16 June to 16 December 1982, Pierre Mauroy appointed her as a Member of Parliament to a temporary government mission, working with Yvette Roudy, Minister for Women's Rights, and Laurent Fabius, Minister Delegate for the Budget. She was responsible for studying the measures required to achieve equal tax treatment of married couples and submitted a report on the subject in May 1983. She took part in the debates on the Roudy law on gender equality in employment between women and men in July 1983. In addition to her work on women's rights, including issues relating to employment, the family, taxation and reproduction, Ghislaine Toutain also worked extensively on labour law and cultural policy. She was rapporteur on the Auroux law concerning workers' freedoms in the workplace, adopted on 4 August 1982, and on the law concerning employees' right to express their views in the workplace, adopted on 3 January 1986.

Alongside her activities in the Assemblée nationale, she held constituency surgeries and carried out constituency work, although she preferred her parliamentary work. She was assisted by two parliamentary aides, one based in her constituency and the other at the Assemblée nationale. One of them was Patrick Bloche, who remained her parliamentary aide throughout her two terms as a Member of Parliament.

Following her defeat in the 1988 legislative elections, Ghislaine Toutain took part in the creation of the weekly newspaper Vendredi, which was launched in November of the same year. She headed the "Politique internationale" section and focused primarily on European affairs until 1996, when the newspaper ceased publication. During this period, she travelled extensively with Pierre Mauroy, who became president of the Internationale socialiste in 1992 and held this position until 1999. She was very close to him and used these journeys to write articles.

Alongside her work as a journalist, Ghislaine Toutain was appointed to the social section of the Conseil économique et social, where she served from 1989 to 1991. In 1990, she was also entrusted with a mission concerning the implementation of gender diversity in employment and gender equality in employment in French companies, working with Michèle André, Secretary of State for Women's Rights. Following this mission, she submitted a report in 1991.

Her work on gender diversity in employment and gender equality in employment did not end there. In 1992, she was again entrusted with a mission, this time working with Véronique Neiertz, Secretary of State for Women's Rights, and Martine Aubry, Minister of Labour, to implement certain proposals contained in her report. For this purpose, she chaired a working group comprising, among others, company directors and human-resources directors, representatives of the social partners, and representatives of public administrations. In March 1992, she drafted a "guide du savoir-faire de la mixité professionnelle", published in February 1993. She also published L'emploi au féminin: pour une méthode de la mixité professionnelle with La Documentation française in 1992.

The year 1991 was also marked by her departure from CERES, which had become Socialisme et République in 1986, together with other members of the tendency, including Michel Charzat and Jean-Paul Planchou. This departure followed disagreements with Jean-Pierre Chevènement concerning the position to be adopted on the Gulf War and the European question. She subsequently became a member of the Espace socialiste club, founded by Michel Charzat and Jean-Paul Planchou, which brought together many activists who had previously belonged to Socialisme et République.

In 1992, François Mitterrand appointed Ghislaine Toutain as Councillor of State in extraordinary service for a four-year term, ending in 1996. Assigned to the social section in a consultative capacity, she was principally involved in the legal analysis of decrees and bills relating to social law. Few records relating to this work have survived.

Between 1996 and 1997, Ghislaine Toutain took part in numerous seminars, conferences and missions concerning women's rights in Europe. In 1998, she joined the Fondation Jean-Jaurès. She served as director of external relations until 2012 and worked primarily on women's rights. Over the course of twenty years, she organised at least one seminar on this subject each year, often with a European dimension and in cooperation with the Fondation Friedrich-Ebert and FEPS (Foundation for European Progressive Studies). She travelled extensively throughout Europe to prepare and organise these seminars, which were often held in Paris or Berlin. At the Fondation Jean-Jaurès, she was editor-in-chief of La Lettre de la Fondation, where she was responsible for Pierre Mauroy's editorial and wrote articles. She also served as Pierre Mauroy's political adviser and parliamentary aide in his capacity as president of the Jean-Jaurès Foundation, as well as his parliamentary aide in the Sénat from 2000 to 2012. In her capacity as parliamentary aide, she was chiefly responsible for drafting his speeches.
In 2013, she became a member of the Conseil d'administration of the Institut Pierre Mauroy, originally known as the association Les Amis de Pierre Mauroy, which had been established several months after Pierre Mauroy's death. She served as Secrétaire générale and organised an annual conference, subsequently overseeing the publication of its proceedings. Between 2013 and 2018, she continued to work on women's rights for the Fondation Jean-Jaurès and retained her role as political adviser to the president of the Jean-Jaurès Foundation, first under Henri Nallet (2013–2022) and then under Jean-Marc Ayrault (since 2022).

Biographical note on Francis Sorin

Francis Sorin was born on 7 November 1943. He joined the Parti socialiste unifié (PSU) in 1962 and was active in the party for two years. During his university studies, he held "responsibilities in student trade-union organisations.[1]" He obtained a law degree in 1967 and continued his studies at the Institut d'études politiques de Paris (Sciences Po), from which he graduated in 1969. It was there that he met Ghislaine Toutain, whom he married in 1976. In 1971, shortly after the Épinay Congress, he joined the Parti socialiste. He then took part in the work of the Commission nationale Communication-Propagande, notably alongside Georges Sarre. A journalist, he was also a member of the editorial committee of Combat socialiste from approximately 1971 to 1981. As a member of CERES, he was active in the Paris federation of the Parti socialiste, first in the Eighteenth Section. There, he served on the Commission exécutive fédérale and contributed to the preparation of PS 8ème, the publication of the socialist section of the 8th arrondissement. He later joined the Ninth Section.

After approximately ten years of involvement in the Parti socialiste, during the 1970s and the early 1980s, Francis Sorin focused on his professional career in the private sector, working in the energy and nuclear industries. He became director of the information department of the Société française d'énergie nucléaire (SFEN). He was also editor-in-chief of the Revue générale nucléaire, which he founded with Rémy Carle in 1975, enabling him to pursue his career as a journalist.

Although he no longer held a leading position within the Parti socialiste from the 1980s onwards, Francis Sorin nevertheless continued to belong to the party and to be active within it. While Ghislaine Toutain was employed by the Fondation Jean-Jaurès, he took part in its seminars on energy in 2001 and 2002.

Scope and content

The fonds consists primarily of paper records. It also contains photographs, CDs, audio cassettes and floppy disks.

Archival significance

The fonds documents Ghislaine Toutain's long and varied career. Researchers will find numerous records relating to the organisation and functioning of CERES, from its beginnings through to its split around 1991. The fonds provides an opportunity to study the career of a Member of Parliament during the 1980s. It also documents almost forty years of involvement in feminist issues and women's rights, particularly taxation issues affecting women and married couples, gender equality in employment, and women's position in politics and within the Parti socialiste. The fonds also provides access to several decades of work relating to Europe and the European Union. Finally, it contains records of the Fondation Jean-Jaurès and complements the personal fonds of Pierre Mauroy.

Custodial history

The Ghislaine Toutain archives were kept in two parts, in two separate locations:

- The first part of the fonds, consisting primarily of records created before she joined the Fondation Jean-Jaurès in 1998, was kept at her home, in her office, in files. This office was shared with her husband, Francis Sorin, whose activist papers were also stored there.

This explains why one series of the Ghislaine Toutain fonds is devoted to the papers of Francis Sorin (29 FP 76–80). It also explains why some of Francis Sorin's papers and records created by him may have been filed within the series "Parti socialiste: engagement militant et journalisme" of the Ghislaine Toutain fonds (29 FP 03–28). It was sometimes difficult to determine the archival ownership of the records, particularly when files contained documents written by both Ghislaine Toutain and Francis Sorin. This part of the archives had been affected by damp. Although it has since been treated, this explains why some documents may be in poor condition.

- The second part of the Ghislaine Toutain fonds, comprising records created after she joined the Fondation Jean-Jaurès, was kept in her office at the Foundation's headquarters. These records were created in the course of her work at the Fondation and as Pierre Mauroy's parliamentary aide in the Sénat. This part of the fonds contained audio cassettes, floppy disks and CDs. It should nevertheless be noted that some records created after Ghislaine Toutain joined the Fondation Jean-Jaurès were also kept at her home, together with the first part of the fonds.

Arrangement

The Ghislaine Toutain fonds consists of twelve series. The physical division of the fonds into two parts, records dating from before and after Ghislaine Toutain joined the Fondation Jean-Jaurès, influenced the arrangement of the fonds and the creation of these series.

The records dating from before Ghislaine Toutain joined the Fondation were arranged in files, generally bearing titles. Three main series emerged from the names Ghislaine Toutain had given to the files: "vie du PS" (which became the series "Parti socialiste : political activism and journalism"), "CERES" (which became the series "CERES – Socialisme et République"), and "Femmes" (which became the series "Women's rights and feminist activism"). Five further series were created for the remaining files and records, following the history of Ghislaine Toutain's activities and positions: Member of Parliament (the series "Députée de Paris (1981–1986) et de la Marne (1986–1988)"), member of the Conseil économique et social (the series "Conseil économique et social"), conseillère d'État (the series "Conseil d'État"), activities and travel relating to the Internationale socialiste (the series "Internationale socialiste"), and activities and projects relating to Europe (the series "Travail et projets sur l'Europe"). Finally, a series was created for records produced by the contre-gouvernement in 1968.

The original files, as they had been kept in Ghislaine Toutain's archives, often combined different dates and subjects. Most of these files were therefore rearranged, at least by subject; this was particularly the case for the series "Parti socialiste: engagement militant et journalisme" and "Droits des femmes et engagement féministe". The files in the series "CERES – Socialisme et République" were retained in their original arrangement. This accounts for the chronological overlaps between the files. Records relating to CERES found in other files were added to this series. Some coherent files were retained as found. This explains why sub-files are sometimes identified in the descriptions. Ghislaine Toutain's journalistic work for Vendredi and Combat socialiste was arranged with her activist papers relating to the Parti socialiste. This decision was made both because the Parti socialiste employed her and because the volume of these records was limited. Finally, posters, photographic prints and brochures were removed from the fonds, as was most of the activist press.

Ghislaine Toutain's feminist activism was not limited to her activities and mandates. For this reason, the series "Droits des femmes et engagement féministe" brings together records relating to women's rights and feminism arising from Ghislaine Toutain's work within the Parti socialiste, the Assemblée nationale and after her parliamentary terms. The other series therefore contain no records relating to feminist issues. This decision preserves Ghislaine Toutain's own arrangement, in which files were labelled "Femmes". This principle applies only to records dating from before Ghislaine Toutain joined the Fondation. Ghislaine Toutain's feminist records dating from after 1998 are held in the series "Fondation Jean-Jaurès", within the subseries "Séminaires, colloques, forums, études".

At the Fondation Jean-Jaurès, Ghislaine Toutain's feminist activism and work on women's rights primarily took the form of organising and participating in seminars and writing articles.

The records dating from after 1998 were kept mainly in files at the Fondation Jean-Jaurès' premises. They were divided into two series that reflect the original arrangement of the files.

The first series, "Fondation Jean-Jaurès", brings together records unrelated to Pierre Mauroy. These consist primarily of seminars organised by Ghislaine Toutain, her participation in seminars organised elsewhere, and, more broadly, her work at the Fondation.

The second series, "Collaboratrice parlementaire (Sénat) et conseillère (Fondation Jean-Jaurès) de Pierre Mauroy", contains records created by Ghislaine Toutain for or in connection with Pierre Mauroy. This series combines her roles as parliamentary aide and adviser because it is often difficult to determine whether records were created by Ghislaine Toutain in her capacity as parliamentary aide or as adviser.

The subseries "Collaboratrice parlementaire (Sénat)" nevertheless brings together records that were unquestionably created in her capacity as parliamentary aide. Most of the documentation in this part of the fonds was destroyed following appraisal. Documentation supplied to seminar participants was retained, as was documentation that was not, or was difficult to, locate elsewhere, together with certain press articles. Photographs, audio cassettes, floppy disks and CDs were removed from the fonds. It should finally be noted that some records in the "Internationale socialiste" series had been kept in the Foundation's archives. For greater clarity and to facilitate access to the records, it was decided to bring together in a single series all records relating to the Internationale socialiste, whether created before or after 1998.

Finally, the Ghislaine Toutain fonds contains a series entitled "Archives de Francis Sorin". This consists of Francis Sorin's files found within the fonds. These files were for the most part retained as found and brought together to form four sections. The first three document Francis Sorin's activities within the Parti socialiste during the 1970s: his involvement in the Fédération de Paris du Parti socialiste and CERES (29 FP 76), his work for the newspaper Combat socialiste (29 FP 77), and his work within the Commission nationale Communication-Propagande (29 FP 78–79). The fourth section (29 FP 80) contains records relating to the European constitutional treaty (2005).
